Conflictology with UNITAR

To live is to resolve conflicts. Conflicts with oneself, within the family, within education, at work, within the social, political and international sphere. Conflicts that are always violent and affect health and coexistence, leading to economic and human losses.

Our programmes are multidisciplinary, comprehensive and linked to research and prestigious universities all over the world. Through the International Society of Conflictologists, these programmes provide professionalization and international participation.

A special collaboration with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) has been established to jointly run this programme.

Objectives

- Understanding the theory, its different approaches and characters in contemporary conflicts.
- Acquiring the skills to analyse and plan the action in peaceful interventions in conflicts, both from the prevention and intervention perspective as the conflict occurs.
- Learning techniques and strategies for an intelligent and non-violent intervention in conflict situations.
- Accessing information and knowledge to develop efficient intervention programmes and knowing how to manage the search for specific and positive solutions.
- Having the ability to manage and facilitate negotiation and mediation processes.
- Transforming the communication process to prevent and pacify conflicts.

Competencies

- Understanding the overall concept of what we mean by conflict resolution, its terminology and the action criteria, techniques and methods specific to it.
- Understanding and learning how to analyse how family, education, political, social and armed conflicts occur and also learn how to manage, transform and resolve them using strategies, techniques and resources for an intelligent and non-violent intervention.
- Acquiring the skills to analyse and plan the action in peaceful interventions in conflicts, both from the prevention and intervention perspective as the conflict occurs.
- Having the ability to develop communication aspects to prevent, direct and pacify conflicts.
- Knowing how to find information and knowledge to develop efficient intervention programmes and manage the search for specific and positive solutions.
- Designing, managing and developing conflict resolution processes based on the different techniques and procedures.

Who is it for?

- All individuals responsible for and interested in conflict resolution.
- Advisors, executives, managers, lawyers in all sectors.
- Civil servants and administrators of public and private institutions.
- Administrators and employees of NGOs and other institutions who work in areas of conflict and on reconstruction, development and international cooperation.
- Politicians and unions.
- Military personnel and police.

Profiles

Aimed, among others, at professionals from the fields of law, psychology, political science, sociology, economics, education, social education, social work, environment, journalism, architecture, advertising and public relations, real estate and the association of property managers, real estates and tenements association administration, etc.
